

Oluatoyin Samantha Alleyne is a distinguished journalist with over 25 years of experience in the media industry, specializing in health, crime, gender, and human-interest reporting. A long-standing member of the Stabroek News editorial team, Samantha has served as a senior reporter and assistant editor, widely recognized for her compelling storytelling, investigative depth, and ethical journalism.

She holds a Master of Arts in International Journalism from City University, London, and a Certificate in Newsroom Management from the Commonwealth Press Union. Her professional journey is marked by numerous accolades, including multiple national PAHO Health Journalism awards and a regional Sagcor award for excellence in reporting. In 2004, she was awarded the prestigious Commonwealth Press Union Scholarship.

Samantha's work has consistently focused on the lived experiences of marginalized communities. She has reported extensively on HIV and AIDS, gender-based violence, child abuse, and the challenges faced by women in the mining sector. Her collaborations with organizations such as UNICEF, ChildLink, and the Guyana Women Miners Organisation have helped to amplify critical social issues through journalism.

Her international experience includes internships at The Sunday Times and Daily Mail in the UK, and fellowships and reporting tours across Africa, the Caribbean, and the United States. Samantha also contributed to media development as a facilitator and mentor, having conducted training sessions on women in journalism in partnership with the U.S. Embassy in Guyana.

Samantha Alleyne's career reflects a steadfast commitment to journalism that informs, empowers, and inspires social change.